
Immersion Imagery About Us

The Jones brothers have always had an interest in film and photography. After completing a diploma in Screen and having worked on and directed over 25 shorts the brothers jumped at the opportunity to work on the local feature ‘Wish Bone’ shot in the Southern Highlands directed by Dave Letch that took over seven months to complete. Soon after the completion of ‘Wishbone’ the brothers got involved in another local production ‘The Girl Who Lived’ based on the acclaimed play directed by Adam Laughlin shot in Wollongong. Assigned the job of Directors of photography the brothers expanded on the scope and looks that can be achieved via HD with outstanding results. Currently the Brothers are working on the ‘The First War of the West’ directed by Stan Kapinski. While having a love for film, the brothers have worked on Music Videos and are currently working on a pictorial mood piece of the Highlands incorporating HDR (high dynamic range) image technology. If the Brothers are not found behind a HD camera they are out shooting HDR or Infra Red landscapes with an SLR. Their skills in photography have been internationally recognised with Richard accepting the International Society of Photographers award in Los Vegas in 2006. As this is the highest photographic achievement they have scores of awards in local, national and international photographic competitions.
